out of the barber's chair and proceeded to have his tog dusted off by Colonel Epamisondas Pilcher, the colored gentieman who does the elegant at Boltz's.

Then, with waxed mustache, the Judge proceeded to his office to spend a few moments in meditation on the vanity of life, but was rudely and vociferously interrupted by Ben Bowman, how wanted a warrant for a scamp who had stolen his coat and hat while he had been ext his coat and hat while he had been get ting shaved.

Judge Bennett listened to his tale of woe, swore him and filled out the war-rant for "some person to the County Judge unknown," and then casually asked for a description of the missing articles

"Why," said Ben, following up his ex-clamation with something that wouldn't look nice in print, "Why, that's my coat you've got on your shoulders, Judge"

And so it proved.

The warrant was torn up, the twain ad-burned to a symposium, and Bowman romised secrecy over something which heers and sometimes inebriates—if taken

CYLINDRICAL STREETCAR.

Unique in Appearance and Expected to Save Much Money.

A car has just been completed at Con cord, N. H., which puts into practice what has heretofore been considered a chimerical idea of the novelist. It is cylindrical in form, like the imaginary cars Jules Verne and others have told of, have

Jules Verne and others have toid of, have seen. It is no theory, but entire prac-tice, and it will save the railroad compa-nies many thousands of dollars. The car is a curious embodiment of genius and convenience. It is practically genius and convenience. It is practically cylindrical in form, although this by no means interferes with the seating capac-ity. Its chief claim to fame, however, lies in the fact that each section of the sides, with windows of curved glass, slides up under the roof, just as the cur sides up under the roof, just as the cur-tain of a roll-top desk disappears when it is pushed forward. Just as the sides dis-appear a running board drops down be-low the floor of the car, and in the usual position on the outside. In this way the comfortable closed car is transformed into an open car of neat appearance.

Under the present system it is necessary to keep a much larger amount of rolling stock on hand than would be the case if the newly invented car were used as it is, each street railway has both sum-mer and winter cars, each of which has to lie idle part of the year. Under the new arrangement there would be only one sort of a car, and, therefore, it would one sort of a car, and, therefore, it would be wholly unnecessary the have part of the company's capital tied up in a lot of cars that are useless a portion of the year. A car of the new type is now in opera-tion on the line of the Concord, N. H., street railway. All sorts of tests have been applied to it, and it has been run in all kinds of weather, but the emergency is yet to srise in which it does not give direct satisfaction.

The unveiling in the Hotel Lafayette,
Philadelphia, of Mulvany's heroic picture of "Sheridan's Ride" naturally brings to mind the famous poem, bearing the same title, written by Thomas Buchanan Read. title, written by Thomas Buchanan Read, In order to appreciate the story of its origin, let us first read the lines. They are worth remembering, although abse-itately inaccurate from a historical stand-point. Here they are: Up from the South a threak of day, Bringing to Winebester Fresh dismay. The design of the story of the story of the trenth grammar and the story of the The terrible grumble and rumble and roar, Telling the battle was on once more, And Sheridan—twesty miles away. And widnes util tubes billows of war

And wilder still those billows of war Thundering along the horizon's bar, And louder yet into Winchester rolled The roar of that red sea uncontrolled, Making the blood of the listener cold As he thought of the stake in that flery fr And Sheridan—twenty miles away.

And Sheridan—twenty miles away.

But there is a road from Winchesert own, A good, broad highway leading down;
A good, broad highway leading down;
And there, through the dish of the more A steed, as black as the steeds of night;
Was seen to pass as with eagle flight—
As if he knew the terrible need,
Be stretched away with the utmost speed:
Hills rose and fell—but his heart was gay,
With Bertralem-driven miles was first.

Still sprung from these swift hoofs,th South. South, ist, like the smoke from the cannon's mouth trail of a comet sweeping faster and faster.

The heart of the steed and the meanter master were heating like prisoners assaulting their walls, impatient to be where the battle-field calls. Every nerve of the charger was strained to full play with Sheridan—only ten miles away.

Under his spurning feet, the road Like an arrowy Alpine river flowed, And the landscape sped away behind Like an ocean flying before the wind. And the steed, like a bark fed with
